RECENT CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATIVE DISTRICTS OF CHINA

This list of administrative districts in China includes the names of all nationally and provincially controlled municipalities regardless of date of change, and in the case of heiens and other lower divisions only those names and/or status which have been officially changed during or since 1936.

In the left-hand column are the present names and/or status of the various jurisdictions as shown in the handbook published in November 1947 by the Ministry of the Interior. In the right-hand column are the former names and/or status of territories, or parts of territories, now under the jurisdictions named in the first column. Where only one name is given in the second column, its territory may or may not be coterminous with that named in the first column. When more than one name appears in the second column, two or more areas have been combined, either in their entirety or fractionally, to form the new jurisdiction. The data in the second column should be taken as informative rather than as definitive.

GLOSSARY

Shih: municipality

Hsien: administrative district roughly corresponding to a county.

She-chih-chü: territory under an administrative office or bureau where the full hsien government organization has not yet been completed or inaugurated.

Hsing-oheng-oh'u: territory (section) in which appointive administrative officials are functioning.

Chih-li-t'ing: territory administered by an official directly responsible to a high-ranking authority such as a governor, viceroy, or the throne.

T'ie-chung-ch'u: territory (section) under some special kind of administration.
